Selectmen from Andover, Hanover, Magalloway, Newry, Upton and Wilson's Mills met at the Raymond C. Foster School Thursday evening to discuss the possibility of getting a full time Deputy Sher-iff for the area. This is a large area with no State Trooper, Deputy or local police force, and there has been considerable vandalism, breaking and entering, etc. in the past few months. It was voted to ask Sheriff Howe and possibly some one from the State Police to meet with the Selectmen in the area to discuss providing more protection

MINORITY GROUPS CAN WIN Dr. J. Phillip Jackson, Community Church, Rumford Center

In this age of big things, mass production; mass movements; mass confusion; we are incline? to neglect the important influence of the minority. There is a growing tendency to get our eyes or the big things and eventy around us. The history of all revivals in the past shows that the invariably began with one individual or a small group of individuals. The early Pentecostal Revival began with Peter and the hundred and twenty in the upper room at Jerusalem.

There was a time when Noah was a solitary figure because he believed that God would send the flood. Apparently he was the only man of what it could be said at the time of the flood that he was "perfect in his genera-tions," and "walked with G.d." spreading the knowledge of Chris-Doubtless, he was a subject of scorn and ridicule by the major-ity, yet his influence on all suc-vent the fabric of society tottercceding generations was greater than all the other people of his day, who doubtless numbered millions. AMBUSH IN AUGUSTA

Reprinted by permission The Legionnaire, April 1976 Those of us who watch the legislative scene in Augusta have been intrigued by the creation of a special committee made up on the Executive and Legislative branches of Maine State Government and designed to seek out "low priority programs" for cuts reductions and possible elimina-tion. Every citizen in Maine should applaud the efforts of the Gover-nor and Legislative leaders to cut "fat" from programs and to prevent unnecessary tax increases. However, it is becoming increasingly clear on the Augusta scene that a few powerful organiz-ed groups and associations are in control and the demands of these special interests are being heard loud and clear. The people of Maine should become alarmed at the growing power of a few organ-izations seeking to build empires at the expense of those who can-not speak for themselves. "Low priority programs" can well mean those who cannot lobby for themselves, the silent people of Maine who suffer because there is no

Our day begins at 6:30 when our early birds arrive. Brooks is on hand to greet them when their parent leaves them, and also pre-pares a nutritious breakfast.

After breakfast, clean-up and free play, Brooks settles the children down for story-time, When MET LAST WEEK the remainder of the children, who ride the bus arrive, the pace at the center quickens. New arrivals hang their coats on their own most hook in the coat rooms, and put awny articles from home in their Art own cubbies.

Handwashing is followed by a combination breakfast (for new privale) and snack (for our early birds) and then all go to the bath-rooms where each child has his own tooth-brush and glass.

After hand washing we are given a nutritious lunch prepared by our cook. Lynda. When we are excused from the table we once again give our teeth a good brushing.

Out-door play follows lunch. When the bus students leave at 1:00—the remainder of the children choose two books from our library, take them to their own mat where they will nap after story time.

Awakening from their nap the children play with table toys until wash-up time for afternoon snack. Donna's late afternoon circle-time is followed by activities and free play until 5:00 when the last child has been picked up.

As I came down from the hill As I came down from the hill and stood looking, the valley tree tops were etched so closely against the sky that their tops jabbed into its blue. A cool September wind rustled the turning leaves above me. It made a mournful sound; something like the closing of insects in a doubter. the singing of insects in a dew-covered cornfield on an August night. The air was fragrant with the smell of autumn leaves.

Suddenly at my right above the murmer of the rising breeze came a sharp rattle, a flicker like call. At first I thought of the flicker then realized the call was more powerful and louder.

Clearly revealed on a dead elm, the remains of a one time mon-arch of the forest, was a great black woodpecker. With head drawn far back and crest blazing in the sun, he scaled his watch-tower to the far top. Once he op-ened a wing as if to flash its con-spicuous white markings. Then he sprang away, with a diagonal flight down the air to lower tree, showing the great white area un-der his wings to fine advantage. As I was a bit secluded, I watched him as he split off large slabs from the decaying tree, and chisithe remains of a one time monfrom the decaying tree, and chisted out decaying wood directing attack against, no doubt, an infested section. Chips and bark flew in every direction as a result of his sledge-hammer blows in rapld succession, swinging his head through an arc of six to eight in-ches. At last he must have uncov-ered the insects and silence reigned while he extracted them. When I moved he flew for his sight and hearing are very keen. Again early evening, and the next day he returned. Maybe I had disturbed his meal and he came to finish, or possibly he was just enjoying the slow flowing pond water, its borders clogged with weeds and lily pads, Possibly he liked the September day-break when waters were calm, unruffled by the light breeze that barely fans the cheek or the far shore low and swampy and screened by water brusiz, No matter what Pileated Wood-

1975-76 MAINE SENIORS TAKING SCHOLASTIC APTITUDE TEST SCORE AHEAD OF N. E. & U. S.

Maine high school seniors who took the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) during the 1975-76 school year recorded scores higher than either the New England or national average, Educational and Cultural Services Commissioner H. Sawin Millett Jr., has announced.

Average scores in math were four points above both the national and New England averages, Millet said. Verbal scores were two points higher than the New England average and six points above the national norm. Millett reported that it is the first time in five years that Maine scores have averaged higher than the regional or national test re-

Average SAT scores have drop-ped consistently during the past 10 years on a nation-wide scale, according to Millett, but he pointed out that Maine's yearly averages have not declined as dramatically as the average of national scores.

In the past five years verbal score averages in Maine have dropped 14 points while nationally they have dropped 22 points. Math test averages for Maine in the same time period have dropped four points compared to a 12-point drop in national math averages.

It is the descript drop in SAT

It is the drastic drop in SAT averages that has become a controversial cause for concern na-

On the other hand, Millett re-ported, the average scores for Maine students taking the Achievement Test (ACH), (which com-bined with the SAT makes up the College Entrance Board Examina-tion Test), continue to run below the national and New England av-

Millett said a factor to be taken into consideration in the Maine averages for the ACH is the larger number of students taking the test from this state. Nationally, only 23% of those taking the SAT take the ACH and in New England 46% do while in Maine 65% of those taking the SAT also take the ACH.
